

Headline HIV murderer in Canada gets life in prison
Date 04 Aug 2011
MediaTitle Malay Mail
Section World
Journalist N/A
Frequency Daily
Circ / Read 20,816 / 49,000

Language English
Page No 13
Article Size 33 cm²
Color Black/white
ADValue 203
PRValue 609

'HIV murderer' in Canada gets life in prison

A CANADIAN man convicted of murder in 2009 for knowingly transmitting HIV to women was sentenced to life in prison yesterday and may not be eligible for parole due to the risk he could commit the same crime. Johnson Aziga, a 50-something man of Ugandan descent, was found guilty in April 2009 of two counts of premeditated murder and 10 counts of aggravated sexual assault for spreading the AIDS virus to his lovers. A life sentence in Canada often carries with it the possibility of parole after 25 years behind bars, but an Ontario court designated Aziga a "dangerous criminal," meaning a commission will decide whether parole can be granted. Aziga – who learned of his condition in 1996 – had unprotected sex with 11 women, none of whom were told of his HIV-positive status. — AFP