

Headline Gay Casanova's lovers advised to go for AIDS test
Date 12 Mar 2011
MediaTitle The Star
Section Nation
Journalist N/A
Frequency Daily
Circ / Read 304,904 / 1,026,812

Language English
Page No N56
Article Size 109 cm²
Color Black/white
ADValue 1,979
PRValue 5,936

Gay Casanova's lovers advised to go for AIDS test

MEN who had sex with the HIV-positive gay Casanova have been urged to go for a medical check-up.

Sin Chew Daily reported MCA Public Services and Complaints Department chief Datuk Michael Chong as saying that he had received three calls asking whether the Casanova was a HIV-positive carrier on Thursday.

He said the callers told him that their relatives and friends were also victims of the man, who was believed to have conned nearly 200 young men of their money and valuables besides having sex with them.

Chong said he had obtained the man's personal information and was trying to locate him.

China Press reported that more victims had left messages on the Casanova's Facebook account, revealing how the Casanova had gained their trust and had sex with them before running off with money, laptops and other items.

On Wednesday, four victims had sought Chong's help after one victim posted a photo of the man on Facebook, and other victims recognised him.

> China Press reported that a man wanted to return his newly-bought bed as he claimed it produced static electricity.

Li Jin Dian, 66, from Muar, said he bought the bed on Chinese New Year's eve for his son and daughter-in-law who came home for the festival.

"However, they decided to sleep in our living room after they felt uncomfortable lying on the bed on the first day," he said.

Li claimed that his body "contained" static electricity after sleeping on the bed for a night.

He said he tried to put a crystal ball in the bedroom but the static electricity only disappeared for three days.

"I want a replacement bed from the furniture shop," he said.